New Zealand is the home of surprises. We quote from the Morning Fost the following startling account of the Duke of Welling. ton, written by a candidate for a scholarship in a New Zealand school |-

Wellington was at a ball in Peris when a letter pame to him that the enemy were walting for him. He heard the cancon rearing, and he knew at once what it meant, because his father was killed in battle. Then rushing out into the midst of the enemy, he was struck by a cannon bail and fell doad on the spot. The people torged pale at the and sight after being so merry and happy, and he soon fell into misfortane.

Did he think the present value of the Kowloon Lots could be realised ?. The Chairman-Yes: I think the time for roalising it is ropidly approaching, if it s thought advisable to realise it, which I strongly doubt. Kowleon is developing at a very rapid rate. I scarcely think that any of you can realise the rate at which it is developing. Humphreys Estate is thinking of building twenty houses over there. Mr Wicking said that was the reason he was alluding to this. It occurred to him that as they had had this property for five years there had been an accumulation of interest and taxes which would not be less than $13,000. This sum added to the present depreciation of $7,000 brought the total loss on this property to $20,000. If it could be sold at present valuation it would be desirable to do so. The Chairman-You must take every-

SOME SCENES AND INCIDENTS. It may be permissible -writes A Young Parliamentary liand -to jut down a few impressions of Mr Arthur Peel, and to recove from forgetfulness some of the incidents of his Sprakership. I pass over the first two years of his tenure of office ; for during the se I had no apportunities of personal observation. My first view of him was on the afternoon of the 5th of August; 1880, whom for the third time he-was elected Speaker of the Commons—' thrice within thirty months '-as he folicitously said. And the impression then engraven on the of superb self-pessession, of easoful mestery of himself and approt of circumstances in which be might be placed. There was an bearing and he stood on the lower step of the chair, submitting himself to the will of master he had again become; but the keynote of the man was in his dignity of carriage. Nature had marked him out for a position of authority. In height and erectness of figure, in the poiss of the head, and in the boldly sculptured features he personified the qualities of command. His voice and his use of it were, in eed remarkable. There were three ways in which he would call the House to order; and the least of the three was instinct with a diguified eloquence. In the first the words 'Order ! Order !' would be uttered in a low tone, but yet with sufficient clearness and penetration to be heard in avery quarter of the House. It was a note of guidance rather than of reproof -- s sum- had introduced Mr Dalziel to the House on moning, so to speak, of the wandering or his first election for Kirkoaldy Burghe ;distracted attention of the House to the subject in hand or the orator who was essaying to throw light upon it. Its chief quality was that of persuaniveness. In the second the volume of sound was doubled ! the persuaniveness was left out; the words were uttared with more energy, quickness, and sharpness of emphasis; remonstrance and admonition, with a faint colouring of anger, were thrown into the fuller tonge, In the third manner-used only when the Mr Barry, House was getting out of hand of when a recalcitrant member was trying to dely or evade the rolling from the Chair-the hammer on a block of granite. Order | Order ! would be loudly imperative, menacing in its flerceness, ringing with sternness and anger, and compalling the House to subjection. In this mood the voice of Mr. Paul had much the same offeet upon the House as a vigorously wield. ed whip cracked about the ears of a disobedient dog.
